

Law Personal Statement Examples

Example 1

My attraction to law originates from my interest in justice and rewards. Human behaviour is always alternating and law is able to constantly focus on the rights of people and the bettering of society. Human rights is a challenge we face currently and law has continuously throughout time been able to rightly justify the actions of people to a great amount of satisfaction. Law is a natural part of the ethical system as, laws are followed by everyone. Therefore, I decided to pursue a career in the legal field as I will be personally reinforcing right-doing, and also assisting others in times of difficulty. Acquiring knowledge about the subject of law I believe will increase my way of interpreting and reasoning as an individual, thus improving my morality and virtues.

The complexity of business is challenging, but yet brings a gripping subject matter. Logical thinking and self-motivation are components which I would like to enhance and I believe I will do so by studying business at your university. Understanding the economy and finance are also skills which I will gain from this course, which I find insightful and interesting. I particularly enjoy the way business appropriately blends in with everyday issues, hence I think it's great to incorporate with law as they're both current. Business is incorporated into our everyday life

Since starting my A-Level studies I have taken all rounded subjects which drive me towards studying law. English literature has given me the ability to scrutinise and manipulate things so people have a better understanding and can see things from my interpretation. Skills which a lawyer has to portray within the legal sector as a solicitor or barrister. Philosophy and Ethics has already started to give me insight into law and human behaviour. This is by focusing on morality and distinguishing between right and wrong, which I believe makes up the substance of Law. Drama studies has aided me in being a confident speaker and being able to present myself in a positive and employable light, which I can use for both business and law.

My work experience is varied, I have been exposed to a multitude of different working environments. I work as a sales assistant at 'Greencore', which has influenced my business exposure allowing me to understand numeracy and communication at a deeper level. I have been permitted train new staff in my workplace showing the high level of trust and experience the company has in me. During this my time at Greencore I have been exposed to do work in human resources. This allowed me to be exposed handling peoples situations and coming up with solutions for problems, skills which I will have to display in law.

During my seven years of education I've built skills which have moulded me to be a suitable for your course. I am an enterprise ambassador and working for the company Pixl-Edge within school has allowed me to communicate with other students and organise them, so they're under my supervision. Being an ambassador allowed me to be an independent, a skill which I will need in university. Being a reader leader, where I help a student read once a week, helped me understand others and their emotions. I enjoy reading various genres and reading constantly, this will bring a slight ease to the abundant material I have to go through for law. Reading has helped to improve how much information I can absorb and also and to fixate my concentration. I have been recognised for my commitment to the school by being awarded with the 'Principles Award For Outstanding Contribution To The Academy.’ Showing my constant contribution to the school through through aspects such as teaching African drumming every Thursday to students at my school and performing in a majority of the charity shows put on throughout the year.

Going to university is a challenge, but I think I have been equipped with the right tools making me a suitable applicant to attend your university.

Example 2

It is being observed that the law on parliamentary today is too vague, and very prone to abuse. Hence, the nebulous definition of law has to be elucidated and unravel as soon as possible. Generally, law is an embodiment of justice. It is depicted as a tangible example of truth, freedom, equality and probity. It is frequently asserted that why law even existed in the first place? What is purpose of law? Hence, being viewed comprehensively from a holistic perspective, criminal cases have become more prevalent these days. It is already an uphill task stemming the rate of increase, let alone reversing it. Hence, this is a plausible statement to prove that why stringent law is mandatory to plateau out this increasing criminal cases. Likewise, rather than to counter terrorism, Law has sometimes being used in political dissent. Also, there is much scepticism over the implementation of law. However, there is no universal consensus as to whether or not law serves for the better rights in the judicial system thus far, it is yet to be justified. On the other hand, my interest in law was piqued when I was perusing these particular journals naming The Firm and The Lincoln Lawyer respectively. The justice that was being upheld, the righteousness that was being implicated, were the precursor for me in becoming a lawyer. Besides, my future plans are fairly linear. Education is therefore my foreseeable future. I could barely envisage myself becoming a successful lawyer in the near future. I would strive hard in my endeavour to go beyond its confine and to reach out even further. My parents too, had given me much actionable advices to mould the person I am today. Therefore, I can say that without the former, the latter is no more than a sleepy hollow, which is being observed today.

My profound interest in law have actually motivated me to take part in debate competition. I was equipped with soft skills and some transferable skills. For instance, drafting skills, oral advocacy skills, and trial skills. This has opened up a certain avenues for me as it gave me the chance to fortify my English language proficiency I would have otherwise had. I was able to learn to think like a lawyer apart gaining practical, technical lawyering skills. Nevertheless, I was appointed the Vice President of Red Crescent in my secondary school. I was able to showcase my flair and knack in communicating and having the ability of being dependable in accomplishing tasks given. For example, I’ve held several foot drill and first aid competitions. I was then learnt to coach and lead my former board of executives and demonstrated initiatives by coming up ideas and putting them into actions in resolving problems faced. On one hand, I was also a prefect in my secondary school. I was able to fit in among the students’ culture and discovered ways to discipline them, and I’ve done that pretty well by reinforcing scarce details of student and was able to make the full use out of it. Furthermore, I played an influential role in this responsibility. For instance, during a brainstorming session in which a controversy topic occurred, I would share my point of view by voicing out opinions while being open to feedback, nonetheless, I would also challenge others' opinions by asking some thoughtful questions. This had somehow created a stimulating discussion and even sparked innovations and creativeness.

In the same way, I was the student ambassador in college. I was assigned the duty of welcoming, educating and assisting prospective students. I was held with great responsibility as the college's pride and reputations literally being consigned to me and my fellow mates in this student ambassadors program. Also, I were to attend several workshops organized by the college's counsellor to build up fellow ambassadors' cognitive skills and collaboration in making strides towards mutual goal. Inevitably, there will be some daunting prospects of taking up this enormous responsibility in the sense that I have to balance my studies and at the same time, extracurricular activities. A vast majority of people think that studies prevail over extracurricular activities, whereas my opinion is that both are modestly important.

During my school holidays, I did an attachment in a law firm to gain a better experience and a wholly exposure in this field. I was basically doing odds and ends. For example, sorting out files and cases to be reviewed. But I remembered one thing the lawyer told me: 'The client is not always right, but they are always entitled to respect, response and patience.' I was then learned to respect, understand and tolerate opinions given by my acquaintances. This has indeed put me in good stead to tackle onslaught of ordeals, hiccups and hurdles that come my way in the days ahead.

I am confident that my passion towards the course will embrace me the opportunity to study in the UK.
