It has always been my aim to help people in any way possible. I have strived to make this dream come true by joining the nursing program, and now, I am working as a certified nursing assistant in a hospital. It gives me the joy to look at the smiling faces of people who are recovering, while at the same time, it gives me the motivation to help those who are unwell and need my support. I aim to pursue this career and get a degree of bachelor in nursing (BSN). I am passionate about listening to people's problems and assisting them towards a better future.

The nursing job is very hectic, but that never stops me from following it, as I am at my best when I assist others. Many complications are present in the nursing industry, especially when faced with unfavorable conditions where the family may not be able to adhere to the instructions. Such incidents have led to conflicts in front of my eyes. Due to the patient's anxiety, the patient's family members can get overly harsh, but I have managed to keep my cool and resolve in such circumstances through conversation.

I was born and raised in Africa, where the healthcare conditions were questionable and very backward. It was an entirely different culture from the US, and it was difficult for people to survive the harsh conditions. However, even under such circumstances, I worked as a volunteer in local clinics and provided food to people with HIV to assist them in their struggle. However, it is hard for people to get the necessary treatment in such an environment; seeing their struggles increased my empathy towards them and their battle with illness.

It is my goal to hone my skills here and then implement these around the world wherever there is a need for better healthcare, especially in the region of Africa, my homeland. I would not only assist the people there but also impart knowledge that I have gained to the local community so that they might be able to overcome all the issues they are facing. In addition, I would inspire
